Furthermore, the strongest benefit on cardiorenal protection, stratified according to the presence of cardiovascular risk factors or eGFR, was observed in patients having CHF and CKD (eGFR ≤ 60 mL/min). In contrast to prior studies showing an apparent benefit of DPP-4 inhibitors on cardiovascular outcomes in patients with T2DM and cardiovascular risk factors, including those without CHF (Butcher et al., [@B6]; Christensen et al., [@B10]), this study showed a trend toward no significant benefit in the patients with and without CKD having cardiovascular risk factors but without CHF. This is not entirely unexpected, because the benefits of many cardiometabolic risk factors are non-linear (Matsuzaki et al., [@B21]) and the benefit of DPP-4 inhibitors may not be evident in the presence of these risk factors. In the current study, cardiometabolic risk factors were shown to have diverse associations with MACEs, e.g., T2DM, high LDL-C level and hypertension were associated with an increased risk, while overweight/obesity and high HDL-C level were associated with a decreased risk of MACEs. Previous studies also reported a correlation between overweight/obesity and CV events (Baigent and Ellis, [@B2]; Hogervorst et al., [@B15]), though the conflicting results have been reported in other large cohort studies (Mozaffarian et al., [@B23]; Sattar et al., [@B27]). A pooled analysis of data from five double-blind placebo-controlled trials of DPP-4 inhibitors showed that body weight and BMI were significantly reduced by approximately 1.0 kg and 1.0 kg/m^2^, respectively, in patients treated with DPP-4 inhibitors, independent of the decrease in HbA~1c~ (Ferrannini

Clinical diagnosis of transverse myelitis (TM) is often difficult and time-consuming and time-consuming lumbar punctures are required for confirmation. Therefore, it is important to identify an objective diagnostic tool that can be used to speed up the diagnosis process. High-field magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) as a diagnostic tool for TM has not been widely explored yet. We conducted a retrospective analysis of 30 consecutive patients with a clinical diagnosis of TM who underwent high-field structural MRI. The images were reviewed by four experienced neuroradiologists blinded to the results of clinical examinations. Adjudication was achieved using a computer-based validated scoring system of structural abnormalities. f678ea9f9e
